We dedicate this yearbook to Hillcrest students. They will be the leaders of the future. We wish them well in whatever they choose to become. The Grade Nine students have expressed some of their goals, may they achieve them.

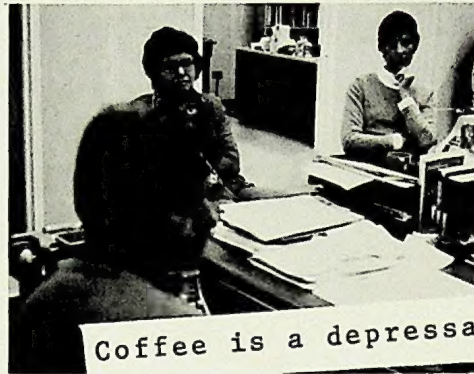

If the majority of our students are an example of our country's youth, then our future is bright! Our challenge to them is to be aware of the problems Canada is facing for soon they will be their problems. Now is the time to prepare to be the kind of adults this country needs to handle the necessary changes of the future.

Sincerely

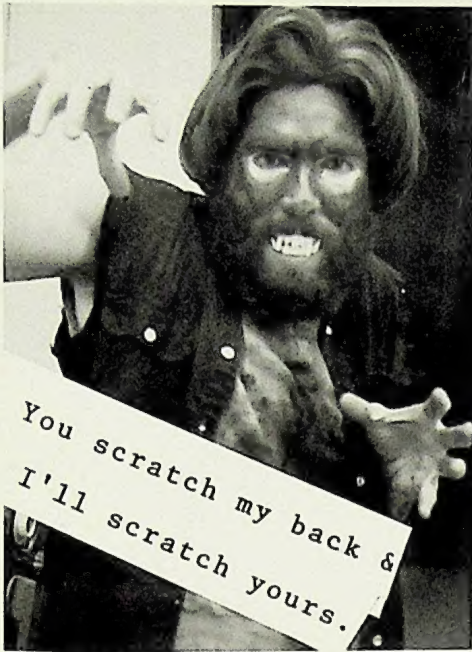

Your Yearbook Staff

You scratch my back &
I'll scratch yours.

Yuk! It was the wrong blood type.

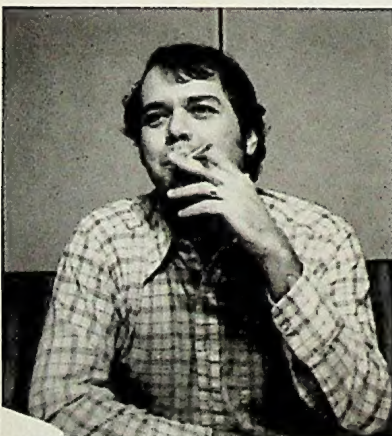

Working here hasn't affected me at all.

I'll never make it to the end of the year.

Stop in the name of science

Do you think we should stop meeting like this?

Teaching makes me nervous

Can you picture it?

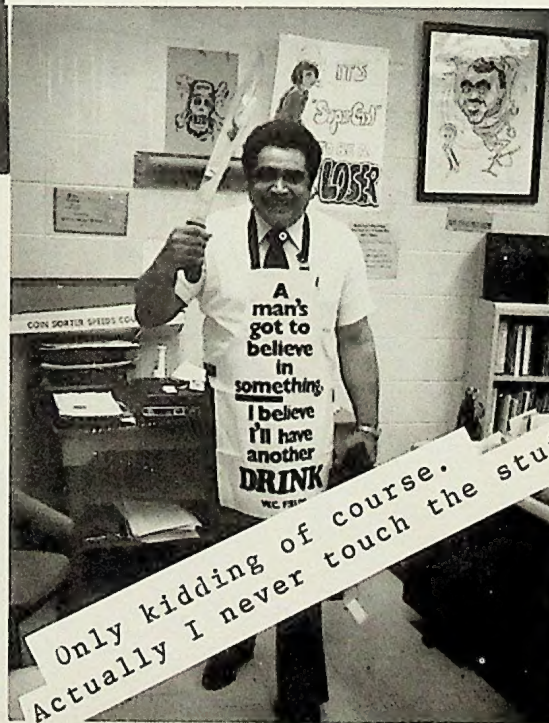

I should have gone home earlier from the staff party.

How do I feel about school?

I have a warrant for your arrest.

Only kidding of course. Actually I never touch the stuff.

I'm only 26.

Thanks!

This way to the bathroom.

The transition from Elementary to Junior high was very difficult for some.

Superharlan will save you

Gimme that bear you....

GRADE SEVEN COMMENTS ON FROSH

It was fun! I think.

Can't wait until Grade Nine

Weird, very weird!

!!!&#!!

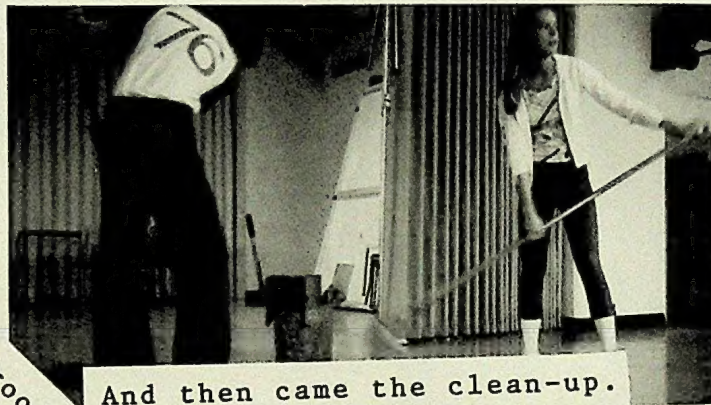

Frosh makes us feel we're wanted!

Boys dressed as mature women! Stupid!

Some Grade Nine kids went too far!

Far out! get my revenge!

Frosh was stupid!

And then came the clean-up.

Why don't they think of something new?

Kangaroo Court was fun!

Boring!

Initiation rites!

Fun-Fun-Fun!

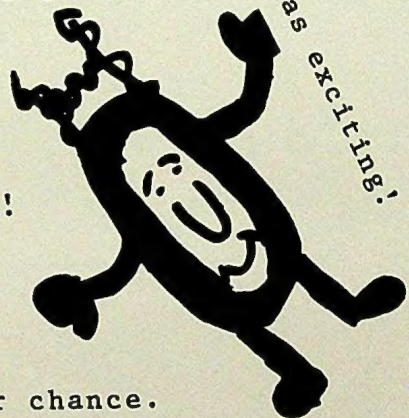

Frosh is designed to give Grade Nine their jollies!

There should be more strict rules!

Alright!

The best time of Grade Seven!

Frosh was exciting!

It's not fair! But keep it until we get our chance.

WINTER   TIME

Winter time is full of fun
We ski and skate and sometimes run
The air is cold but we don't care
For we wear thermal underwear

Winter time is full of snow
And we have many places to go
Skating rinks and toboggan hills
We have very many thrills

Winter time gives us a blast
And we hope that it will last
We play hockey with the team
If we win we yell and scream

Winter time brings many lumps
We get measles, chicken pox, mumps
We work hard at school each day
Then we all go out to play

Winter time brings Christmas Day
We all go to church and pray
We got toys and books and things
We enjoy what "Santa" brings

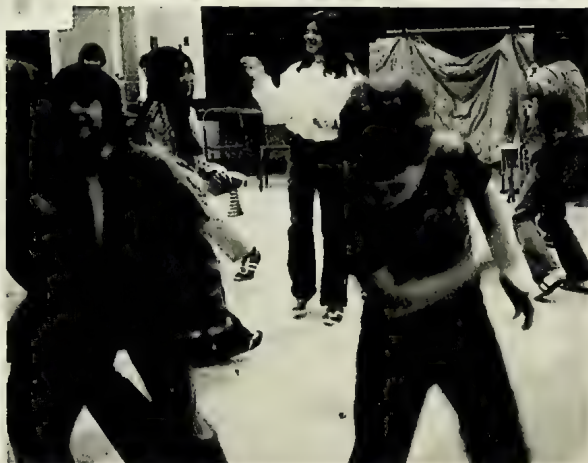

Winter time will soon be over
Spring will come and so will clover
We will enjoy the summer and then
Hope for winter to come again

THE LAST MAN

The spring afternoon filtered through the trees to the melting floor of the park. Youngsters wearing sloppy rubber boots chased one another through the slush and mud, laughing and screaming in the fresh, cool air.

Kaspyan* paused to look at the video-scene before him, contemplating on the sounds of melting water and frolicking children. He was to observe these records of old earth for the purpose of the feeding of the memory banks of Magnus I, the master computer. All this was part of an enormous plan to rebuild the outside world above them, a world dead for centuries but now free of radiation and able to support life.

Kaspyan had lived beneath the earth's surface all his life as had many generations before him. A rebuilding of life outside had at first seemed a dream come true, but now Kaspyan was not certain. He had changed since his appointment to the video-sector only a few months ago when he had realized that the straight, solid lines of concrete, metal and plastic were in his blood. He could not simply abandon the beautiful abstract forms of architecture and the feel of a flat hardness against his feet.

Kaspyan stirred to touch a dial and the spring tableau set into his Magnus Ic console faded to darkness. He pivoted in his chair and, rising to his feet, he swept past the utilitarian concrete of his work-cell to the corridor.

Keeping an expressionless countenance and a businesslike pace, Kaspyan arrived at Magnus I and proceeded to enter the day's data into the complex machine. His face, as usual, betrayed no evidence of thought or feeling, and as far as Kaspyan knew, no one suspected his secret opinion of Lithos-Form. To his fellows he was still silent Kaspyan, offering only an occasional morsel of information when called upon.

He advanced to the nearest down tube which gave him access to the lower living levels. Reaching the more comfortable hallways of the level on which he lived, Kaspyan passed into his quarters as the doors dilated and then contracted behind him.

"Kaspyan, is that you?...Kaspyan?"

The querie came from the walls in a feminine voice, echoing like the ripples of a pond.

"Yes, Fallacia," he answered.

A ghostly form in garments of silk arose behind veils of sheer fabrics and beacons to him. Kaspyan approached, and the curtains were parted by frail fingers.

"Kaspyan," the figure murmured, "See what I have."

She offered him a tiny globe, small enough to be held in the palm, glowing from the eerie light of life within. Kaspyan did not move to take the sphere in his hand.

"It's a baby, Kaspyan, a boy. Isn't it beautiful? It should be born just in time to take to the surface..."

"Kaspyan...are you angry? I know I should have consulted you, but you weren't here. Now I suppose you'll make me take the baby back...Oh please, Kaspyan..."

Her eyes shone with tears as she caressed the tiny orb which she held.

"Don't make me, Kaspyan..." she whimpered.

Kaspyan regarded his pale companion coldly. "It is yours."

Fallacia fell back on her pillow, gratitude and happiness on her tear-streaked face.

Kaspyan left the room but it occurred to him that he had no place to go. He felt only the relief of being away from Fallacia.

Her juvenile manner suddenly aggravated him in a way he could not describe, and he felt that he could not be in her presence for long without disturbing his stoic curtain.

*kas pi an

Confused by this new emotion, he wandered to the upper levels, to where Magnus I's expansive memory continually shifted as pinpoints of energy. Approaching the main console, he experienced an odd thought, a sensation which he had not encountered before.

Kaspyan immediately cancelled the idea and turned away. He waivered for a moment however, and any observer would have witnessed a previously unknown aspect to this man. He paused a moment, fighting inner turmoil, and an insane glimmer appeared in his eye.

He stepped to the M-I panel with Determined assurance and, shifting a number of keys and dials, he caused rows of lights to wink out. With the manipulation of another switch, he thought gleefully that i would be several minutes before the power would diminish sufficiently for anyone to realize what he had done.

Glancing around to confirm his privacy, Kaspyan removed a square of metal to expose complex wiring. It took only a moment to do his work, and then the deed was done. The computer was effaced, and with it the soul of the past was rubbed out.

Somehow, Kaspyan knew that everything was over. There was no longer any need to act the role of an unemotional character as he always had. Feelings bottled up were let loose in a final cry of despair!

He raced through the levels and burst into this chamber where the pale Fallacia toyed with her silvery sphere.

"Fallacia!" he screamed.

She looked up at him with large pools of eyes in a pallid visage.

"I hate you," he hissed through clenched teeth. "I hate Lithos-Form operations."

He grabbed her arms, and Fallacia let out a shriek as her unborn child slid to the floor and smashed as a crystal.

"...And do you know what I did?" he screamed, "I destroyed the M-I!"

"But...Kaspyan," Fallacia stuttered as the lights began to fade, "The computer supplies your power...You're only an android, Kaspyan...you all are..."

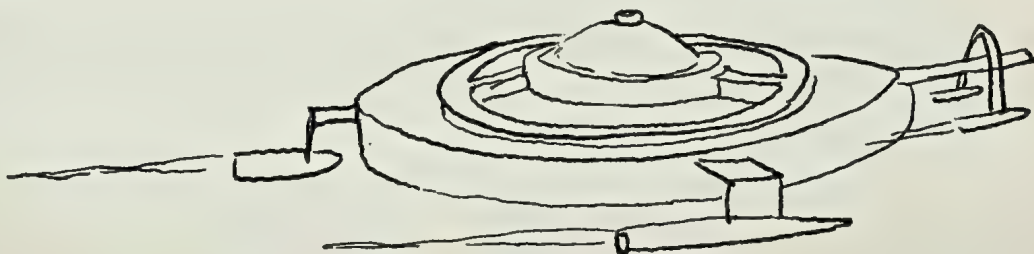

Kaspyan's eyes stared into Fallacia's horrified ones, and he faltered.

"Fallacia, he whispered hoarsely, "What have I done?"

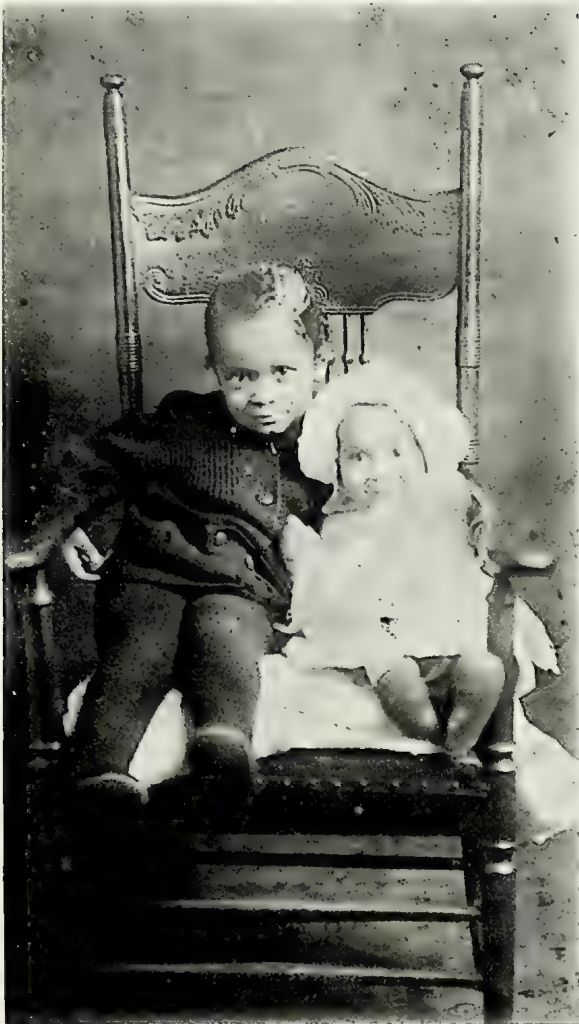

He released his grip on the arms of his companion and, taking a step back, he froze as a mannequin.

Fallacia's delicate hand fell to touch the last shattered prisms of human life, and she wept for the broken machine which she had no knowledge to repair. Staring into the empty eyes of the robot that had caused her doom she lay in shock, hurtling alone through space on a barren world, the last man.

The Principal

Our spotlight this year falls on our principal, Mr. John D. Bright. His life, so far, has been very productive. His experiences as a sports personality have been extremely varied. During high school and college he participated in a substantial number of athletics including baseball, basketball, football, golf, swimming, and track. After college Mr. Bright played Canadian professional football for thirteen seasons and once held every offensive running record in the Canadian football league. As a result of his successful football career, Mr. Bright has been placed in three halls of fame; the Canadian Hall of Fame, the City of Edmonton Hall of Fame, and the Football Hall of Fame in Des Moines, Iowa.

As well as being a veteran competitor in the athletic world, Mr. Bright has also been involved for many years in high school coaching. He has coached football, track, baseball, and volunteered his time as a high school basketball coach at Jasper Place. After having received a university athletic scholarship himself, Mr. Bright is responsible for seven boys from Edmonton high schools receiving such scholarships in the states.

Our principal believes that the schools should be geared to meet both the intellectual and social needs of all students. He hopes that students will realize that the experiences and knowledge gained in school will be of immense value to them in later life.

Mr. Bright hopes that the grade 9's realize that the world is a difficult place to live in and that we are in the midst of an age in which a person must have certain qualifications if they are to be successful in later life. If a person does not possess these skills the danger exists that he may be lost in the shuffle. Our principal believes that there is something available for every student in the school system if they are willing to become involved and learn the things that will meet and satisfy their needs.

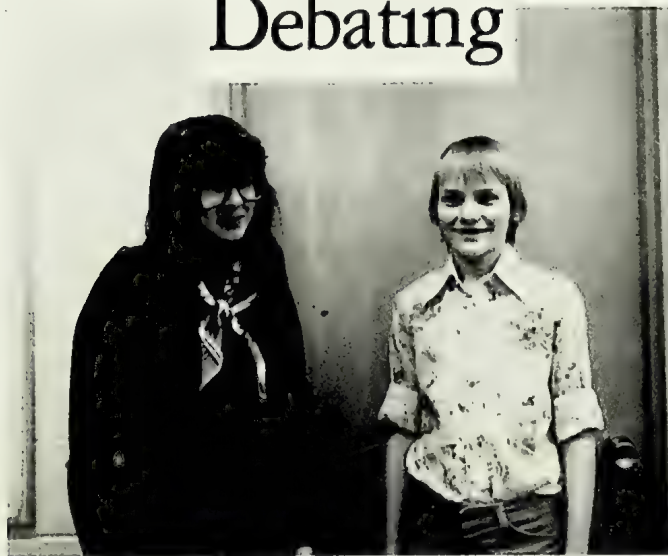

I was cool
then and I'm still cool!!!

Two of our students, Valerie Curtis and Scott Jarron were very successful as a Debate Team. During the year they defeated several High School debate teams, and were undefeated until the final debate. Even though they lost this debate, the staff, student body and administration are extremely proud of Valerie and Scott.

Both students were successful because of hard work, self pride, and a burning desire to achieve. As a result of their efforts, one of the team, Scott Jarron, was selected to attend the National finals in Ottawa.

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE

This year at Hillcrest has been a very busy one for all students because of the new B Option Program. I think we have all enjoyed the varied activities offered. The enthusiasm of the students and teachers participating was obvious throughout the year.

I would like to thank Mr. Schalm for his help and guidance during my year as President. It was a real experience. In addition I would like to thank the others on the students council for their cooperation and assistance throughout the term. The ups and downs were shared by all members of the student's council.

Thanks to you, Mr. Bright, and your administration, the 1976-77 school term at Hillcrest Jr. High was most successful. I hope that the grade 7, 8 and 9 students support their president and students council as we were supported throughout the year.
